Boronia Giant.—The coastal districts of N.S.W. are not good cauliflower climates, but the demand for this delicious vegetable is so great that gardeners have persisted until they have evolved strains of seed that succeed in the warm climate. One of these hardy sorts is Boronia Giant, which has proved to be a reliable sure heading type producing a large head with snow white curd in about four months from planting out. The supply of seed is limited, and gardeners requiring more than packets should order early. Pkts., 1/- and 2/6; oz., 12/6.

GARDEN SEEDLINGS

From April next, when our next general catalogue will be issued, we shall discontinue the sale of flower garden seedlings.

We have always considered it better for our customers to raise their own seedlings, and with our State wide trade, it has become increasingly difficult to give satisfaction always. This does not refer to the hardier vegetable plants, cabbage, cauliflower, tomato, beet, onion, lettuce, etc., of which we grow very large quantities the year round.

Plant Nut Trees

Every home should have a few ornamental trees round. Why not combine shelter, beauty and utility by planting a few nut trees.

For the coastal and warmer parts the Australian nut—the world's finest and most delicious food nut—a beautiful evergreen, should be chosen.

For the mountain and cooler districts the Pecan nuts are the best, though they have succeeded in the warmer districts as well. The Pecan is deciduous—loses all its leaves in the winter, so may be planted where summer shade only is required.

In a few years these nut trees will begin to produce crops of the finest nuts. Nuts should not be only a Christmas dainty, but should form part of the daily food.

Nut trees may be sent by post, and being pot grown may be planted at any time when the ground is in good condition, but the best time for the Pecan nut is during the winter, while they are dormant, and the Australian nuts in Autumn to Spring.

Macadamia ternifolia:—The Australian nut. 3/- post paid.

Macadamia integrifolia.—A new and improved type of the Australian nut, with darker, smoother leaves and bearing two crops of nuts each year under suitable conditions. 3/- each, posted 4/-.
